JOBS FOR COUNT BONI.

By Walter A. Sinclair. What shall we do for Boni if he loses his cashier? There are not very many things that he can do, we fear. But what will poor old Boni do if he must seek a job And rustle for a grub-stake like the plain and vulgar mob? So, being philanthropic, we have figured out a few Neat jobs a poor but busy little nobleman could do.

He might put on an apron-earn a fortune as a chef-To anything but tips and praise be fortunately deaf. He then could fork the dough at will with none around to snoop, And as for Yankee doughbags-why, just leave them in the soup. As chef he could get even with the mighty critic host. And put the blooming bunch to rout by handing them a roast.

He might (like other Frenchmen) be a fancy riding master And catch a falling fortune—there are few ways that are faster. He might go into vaudeville, and there upon the stage Pose as the Human Target; he would surely be the rage. He might escape a creditor (if any debts he owes) By posing as a dummy in a nobby suit of clothes.

There's plenty work for Boni if his fortune doesn't smirk; And surely he is willing to do anything-but work.
